Endodontics can be one of the more difficult procedures for many clinicians: some love to do it and many love to refer. With rapid advancements in techniques, instrumentation, and diagnostic tools, it can be more and more daunting than ever to perform endodontic procedures in a general dental office. This series of presentations will take a deep dive into the mysteries of internal and external cervical resorption, pediatric endodontic management, management of endodontic emergencies in the GP office, and finally and update on the newest techniques and advancements in this exciting field.
